

Uluru–Kata Tjuṯa

Red Centre, NT · UNESCO Dual World Heritage Site · Northern Territory, Australia

Uluru–Kata Tjuṯa is among the most sacred landscapes on Earth for the Anṁangu Traditional Owners. Their laws, stories and responsibilities — Tjukurpa — govern every aspect of this Country. Please follow these guidelines with respect and care.

CLIMBING IS PERMANENTLY PROHIBITED

Climbing Uluru has been permanently banned since 26 October 2019. The climb crosses a sacred men's ceremonial track connected to Tjukurpa. This is a legal prohibition, not a preference. Do not attempt to climb any rock formation anywhere in the park.

DOS AND DON'TS

DO

- ☐ Use the name 'Uluru', not 'Ayers Rock'
- ☐ Stay on all marked tracks at all times
- ☐ Check and respect all no-photography signs
- ☐ Ask explicit permission before photographing Anṁangu
- ☐ Carry minimum 1 litre of water per hour in heat
- ☐ Wear a hat and sun protection at all times
- ☐ Visit the Cultural Centre to learn about Tjukurpa
- ☐ Purchase art from Anṁangu-owned outlets only
- ☐ Check park open/close times each day
- ☐ Observe all closures including Sorry Business

DO NOT

- ☐ Climb Uluru or any rock formation — illegal
- ☐ Enter or photograph any restricted/sacred sites
- ☐ Remove rock, sand, soil or any plant material
- ☐ Approach or disturb any wildlife
- ☐ Enter the Mutitjulu community — closed to visitors
- ☐ Use images of sacred sites in any publication
- ☐ Litter anywhere in the park
- ☐ Walk alone — always with a guide or group
- ☐ Attempt walks in extreme heat (above 36°C)
- ☐ Buy souvenirs from non-Anṁangu outlets

PHOTOGRAPHY RULES

Some areas are permanently off-limits for photography — marked by clear signs. Always ask permission before photographing Anṁangu people. Commercial photography requires a Parks Australia permit.

HEAT & SAFETY

Walks close automatically above 36°C. The nearest hospital is Alice Springs — 450km away. Ensure travel insurance includes medical evacuation. Never walk alone in remote areas.

Please retain this document for the duration of your visit. Park closure status must be verified at uluru.gov.au before every departure.
